A sex tape, purportedly showing a University of Namibia (Unam) student engaging in oral sex with her Zambian ex-boyfriend, has sparked humiliating insults on social media, and was also uploaded to an international porn site.

The shocking footage, which was allegedly forwarded by the male student to some of his friends, went viral on social media this week, leading to a storm of insulting comments against the young lady.

The police told Namibian Sun yesterday that the girl, whose name is known to this newspaper, can lay a charge connected to the dissemination of the sex tape in the public domain.

A source said it was filmed in a hostel room last year, but Unam said there was no evidence in the sex tape to support this assertion.

Unam spokesperson John Hau-fiku said the university was aware of the video.

"My office is aware of the video in question. I am also aware that there is no inference to the university hostels in the said video. I can therefore at best say that the university does not get involved in the private affairs of individuals, students or staff," he said. Asked whether the university will be probing the issue, he said: "The question of investigating if something like that happened on our campus is therefore disconcerting and highly inappropriate."

A Namibian Sun investigation established that the couple were involved in an altercation on the campus last year in which she allegedly threw boiling water at him, after suspecting of going on a date with another woman.

This incident allegedly happened at the university's Emona Sources at the time also speculated that she had been the victim of abuse.
